The global call for businesses and business schools to work together to prepare the next generation of business leaders puts educators at the forefront of the world's largest voluntary corporate citizenship initiative with more than 4,000 stakeholders in 116 countries. The initiative gained momentum last week at the unveiling of the Principles for Responsible Management Education (PRME) at the Palais des Nations in Geneva, Switzerland.

Developed by an international task force of sixty deans, university presidents, and official representatives of leading business schools, the PRME is co-convened by the United Nations Global Compact, AACSB International, the European Foundation for Management Development (EFMD), the Aspen Institute's Business and Society Program, the Globally Responsible Leadership Initiative (GRLI), and Net Impact.
